

MILITARY SPIRIT STILL ALIVE IN GERMANY

(By Associated Press)

BERLIN, Feb. 12.—Reverberance of the war spirit of the German people, which even as late as six months ago apparently had been completely banished, recently has assumed a new and noticeable aspect particularly in relation to the French, who generally are blamed for most of the post-war ills of the German nation.

Germanians and former soldiers alike frankly express the most intense hatred for the French and again are meaning of a day when they can get up in war what they have lost in peace. There is no evidence of feeling against the English and against the Americans, of whom they are expected, commercially, and there is every indication of good-will.

England on the whole has been greeted with a desire for fair play in the execution of the peace treaty, but in many sources the opinion prevails that France is destined to have her way, even at the expense of the integrity of the German nation.

Agitation in certain French circles for an independent south Germany, probably under the domination of Paris, the alleged pro-Polish attitude of the French military in the upper Silesian zone, the insistence of the French that the Elzwhner-see and other "protective organizations" shall at once disarm; threat of a military occupation of the Ruhr district; and use of French negro troops in the occupied zone, all have contributed to this revival of race hatred. Delivery of milk cows to the French has, in view of the milk shortage in Germany and the increase in infant mortality intensified the feeling among the civilian population against the French people.

A German government official with whom the correspondent discussed the situation did not agree with some men who once held high commissions in the army that "another struggle with France is inevitable, but expressed the opinion that hatred of the French is a natural consequence of French conduct. He believed, however, that "personal aspects had led to exaggerated opinions of the war spirit of the German people.

"For example, German army uniforms may be seen everywhere," he said, "and especially in the universities. The stranger immediately jumps to the conclusion that this is an exhibition of the military spirit. The facts are that many soldiers, and this applies particularly to students, are wearing uniforms to conceal the fact they have no shirts. They are too poor to buy other clothes."

"However, he thought, 'that other things being equal,' the Germans would be willing to promptly go about settling old scores with the French."

U. OF PA. GETS OLD SCULPTURE MASTERPIECE

(By Associated Press)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 12.—Two sculptured Chinese horses, considered the finest specimens of this Chinese art extant and among the finest in the world, has come into the possession of the University of Pennsylvania museum as a gift from Elbridge R. Johnson, of Philadelphia.

The specimens are two out of six which embellished the tomb of Emperor Tang Tsung who in the seventh century of our era rose from humble birth by his military achievements to put first his father on the throne and then succeeded him. He was the Napoleon of the far east and ruled during the golden age of Chinese art. From his tomb he had sculptured the six war horses he used in battle, all of which were wounded, and four of these are held by China as priceless treasures. The two which the university has acquired were smuggled out of the empire a few years ago, according to the museum authorities, and China has agreed that they shall remain in this country while jealousy hounding the others.

Don't forget the dance at the Airdome tonight. If you do not attend, buy a ticket and help a swell time.
